Turkey: Last night's abortive coup by former Colonel Aydemir and officers from the Turkish Military Academy in Ankara underscores again the basic instability existing in Turkey and increases the likelihood of tighter military control. Prime Minister Inonu's recent allegation that a critical political situation had developed may even have prompted Aydemir to launch his coup attempt in the hope of exploiting the apparent confusion and uncertainty within the government.

25X1 This was Aydemir's second attempt within fifteen months to overthrow the military-supported Inonu regime. Like its predecessor in February 1962, this coup attempt collapsed within a few hours when it failed to attract any significant military support. As former commander of the Military Academy, Aydemir had strong support among the student officers and apparently also had some armored support. [redacted] 25X1
[redacted] Aydemir believed he had widespread support throughout the army.]

NOTES

South Vietnam: Buddhist grievances against the Diem government, aggravated by troops firing on a crowd two weeks ago, may result in serious new incidents. Demonstrations occurred in several towns on three days last week, and are reported to have been planned for Saigon on 21 May and the central resort town of Dalat on 23 May. The government's handling of the problem so far has been inept, and there is danger of disaffection within the security forces.
